Advanced Simulation in Automotive Design

Physical systems arising in industrial applications are getting more and more complex. Nowadays, such systems are mostly simulated numerically in order to understand the nonlinear system behaviour. Numerical simulation is further an essential part in the product development process in many industrial manufacturing companies, especially in the automotive sector. Here, high-qualitative and efficient software tools are applied which are tailored to the demands of the industrial application, such as vehicle system dynamics, roller/fluid bearing simulation or the simulation of valve trains.
